Aim

The aim of this day is to equip pharmacists with the required knowledge and skills to confidently optimise pharmaceutical care for gastroenterology and hepatology patients. Practitioners will be able to identify and discuss the main clinical issues affecting patient management in this area. A wide variety of common gastrointestinal and liver conditions will be covered including celiac disease, inflammatory bowel disease, primary biliary cholangitis, viral hepatitis and GI bleed.

The learning outcomes for this masterclass will be met by means of small group discussions, case discussions and lectures.

Learning Outcomes

At the end of this masterclass, participants should be able to:

- Discuss the clinical management of the gastroenterology and hepatology patient
- Describe the diagnosis, current treatment and future therapeutic options for patients with celiac disease
- Describe strategies for the management of a variety of common gastroenterology and hepatology conditions including inflammatory bowel disease, primary biliary cholangitis and GI bleed
- Outline the key upcoming developments in the management of gastroenterology and hepatology patients including treatment of viral hepatitis
- Discuss and share practice on common “tricky questions” and queries in this patient group, including the need for a washout period with biologics
- Describe the key principles of safe prescribing in liver disease
